The Lost Amazon : NPR

Remarkable photographic account of Richard Evans Schultes's ethnobotanical expeditions in the Amazon between 1940 and 1951. Large black and white images of enormous trees, hallucinogenic plants, rituals and water, water everywhere. The accompanying biographical essay, written by Schultes's student, Wade Davis, is also excellent.

Schultes' Amazon Turns Science into Art : NPR

Very good story of a photo shoot in the Amazon gone bad. Kirkpatrick and his companions become lost, due to circumstances beyond their control, and are forced to deal with all the perils that the Amazon region can throw one's way. Not at all a difficult read. Just over 200 pages, I read it in less than a day.
